Friendship

Friendship is an integral part of everybody's life as it includes the appropriate relationship between two persons who take care of each other all the time. First of all, it is necessary to observe the concept of friendship concentrating on the notion "friend" and its importance. Thus, friendship can have several stages dividing friends into such categories as the acquainted, best and even bad friends. In fact, all these categories depend on time, distance and trust.

Acquaintances come and go away throughout life when people just interact for a particular purpose either studying or working together. According to the existent definition, acquaintance is a complicated word, because it does not have anything in common with friendship. People establish the communication with each other, but it allows them to support just social connections even if they are good. However, many people make mistakes considering that their new acquaintances refer to their new friends and begin to share the most sacred moments of their life. They do not suspect that their life and all troubles they have mean nothing essential for these acquaintances. Firstly, it is obligatory to separate friends from acquaintances paying attention to the depth of the current interactions. Secondly, the acquaintance's support will differ from the friend's assistance as he/ she will not realize the significance of the situation.

Thirdly, acquaintances just ask a favor never contacting you because of your requests. Thus, such people will never spend time with you for pleasure.

The best friendship relates to honesty and sincerity, and both of these points are equal. It is based on mutual understanding and a boundless support. The best friend is a special person, who is always loyal as he/ she knows about you every minor detail from your life. Such person is your confidence hiding all the secrets and problems you have. A sincere friend usually offers a needed solution to the existent problem assisting selflessly. Nevertheless, the best friend will always tell you the truth even if it can be hard to hear. The bitter truth is better than the sugar-coated lie. Also, distance cannot separate two persons, because it is not vital for them. It does not matter how much time people have spent together as they are connected with each other. In such a way, if one of both friends needs some help or a piece of advice, a sincere friend will support anytime. Mainly, the best friend is like a real family. Such a good person lives deep in your heart, and it is possible to trust him/ her in any situation.

Bad friendship drains the energy as it represents constant stresses and unreliability. A bad friend often demands too much, but he/ she gives nothing instead of it. These relations do not bring any positive emotions, and a person can blame himself/ herself for misunderstanding. Being selfish and self-centered, bad friends are critical of all your actions and failures, and they do not try to support you. Moreover, such friendship causes aggression and angry attitude to life, because both persons feel discontent. Also, a bad friend reminds you of your constant failures in order to manipulate your behavior. There is no relative interaction and communication between both so-called friends. In most cases, he/ she detracts your self-estimate and dignity as your inner feelings do not care him/ her. Lastly, a bad friend can betray a person as his/ her goals are the most important for him/ her.

In conclusion, friendship is a long process that requires not only time but considerable efforts and various situations that check the strength of the relationship. Many people are ordinary acquaintances as they appear and disappear in life. Sincere friends stay forever being ready to help regularly. Undoubtedly, one best friend costs two more as he/ she is a single person whom you can trust your life. However, it is necessary to keep in mind that a bad friend can have a negative influence on your lifestyle, because such person gradually destroys the sense of self.